TURNING FARMLAND INTO CONSERVATION LAND & BUILDING A RESEARCH STATION

by Ulf Tubbesing

Game ranching has, over the past two to three decades, contributed greatly to conservation in Namibia. Numbers of game on private farmland (comprising 43% of the country's surface area) have more than tripled and are exceeding those in Namibian national parks. Since Namibian national parks are under severe tourism pressure (even moderate tourism pressure impacts significantly on arid habitats) and with Namibia's increasing popularity as a tourist destination, there is a great need to increase the total area under conservation in Namibia. Due to budget limitations and pressing sociological needs, our government does not view the addition of more land for conservation purposes a priority. This then places the responsibility (and opportunity) of future expansion of conservation land into the hands of the private sector. > More

FEEDBACK

My experience with Biosphere Expeditions was the event that confirmed my pursuit of a graduate the Maldives, to desk placements in accounting or data analysis. Just have a look at our placements page and see whether you can help from the comfort of your home or in the field.

degree in Conservation Biology. It was so exciting to be given every opportunity for active engagement in all aspects of a real wildlife project. The scientists were so willing to answer my many questions – and I asked a lot! They were open about the challenges and rewards of a conservation project. From our many discussions, I gained great insight into the necessary and important collaboration between biological and social scientists.

Lynn des Rosiers-Kimmel, USA

While all the volunteers came from totally different backgrounds, it was amazing to see a wonderful group of individuals pulling together using all our talents and skills! Oh, and relaxing by the fire, listening to the wonderful night sounds, and sharing our experiences, was a great way to wrap up the day! Thank you Biosphere Expeditions, keep up the good work!
